

Verb Tenses

Angela Gulick

Verbs

Think of a sentence like a movie. The subject is the “star” of your sentence, the person or thing around which all action revolves.

A verb, on the other hand, is the actual action taking place.

Here’s an example: In the movie Die Hard, actor Bruce Willis crawls through a lot of ducts and air shafts.

Bruce Willis is the “star,” the one doing the action. That means he is the subject. “Crawls” is the action being performed – that means “crawls” is the verb.

Sometimes, a verb just describes a state of being or existence.

Roses are red; violets are blue.

The pillow case had Teenage Ninja Mutant Turtles on it.

My brother is the owner of a 100-acre farm called “Belly Acres.”

Verb Tense

Verb tense is determined by looking at two factors:

Factor One: When did the action take place?

Past Tense – these events have already taken place by the time the reader is reading the sentence.

Present Tense – these events are taking place at the same time the reader is reading the sentence.

Future Tense – these events will take place in the future, sometime after the reader has read the sentence.

Factor Two: Was/Is the action a continuous and on-going activity or a one-time situation?

Verb Tense

For the next several slides, you are going to see a LOT of verbs and tenses, and you may feel like your head will explode.

These slides are not meant to be memorized or worried about. Rather, the slides are meant to show you that when it comes to verbs, you have a lot of choices. But all choices depend on these three factors:

1. Is your subject plural (more than one) or singular (one)?
2. Did the action already take place, is the action currently taking place, or will the action take place in the future?
3. Is the action a one-time deal or does the action continue?

Verb Tense: Past

Simple Past

A simple past tense verb uses a verb with an -ed suffix.

Anna jumped on the bed and giggled like a three-year-old child.
The six crows landed on the bird feeder and fought.

Past Continuous

A past continuous verb uses was/were + a verb with an -ing suffix.

Anna was jumping on the bed and was giggling like a three-year-old child.
The six crows were landing on the bird feeder and were fighting.

Past Perfect

A past perfect verb uses had + a verb with an -ed suffix.

The six crows had been landing on the bird feeder and had been fighting.

Verb Tense: Present

Simple Present:

I exercise every day, and I love my Zumba class.

They watch Mad Men on Sundays but stop to watch Sunday Night Football.

Present Continuous

A present continuous verb uses am/are/is + a verb with an –ing suffix.

I am exercising every day, and I am loving my Zumba class.

They are watching Mad Men on Sundays but are stopping to watch Sunday Night Football

Present Perfect

A present perfect verb uses have/has + a verb with an –ed suffix.

They have been watching Mad Men on Sundays but have been stopping for Sunday Night Football.

Something tells me this isn't what they meant

Verb Tense: Future

Simple Future (will, may, might):

A simple future verb uses a word like will/may/might + verb.

Katie will dress her puppy up in outfits that Katie will make herself.

My little puppies might try to hide between the furniture because they might get scared.

Future Continuous

A future continuous verb uses will/may/might + be + a verb with an -ing suffix.

Verb Tense Agreement Errors

A verb tense agreement error occurs when you blend past, present, and future forms of verbs together. Here is an example:

Last Saturday, I called up my cousin Keith and compliment him on his band's new CD.

>>>The words "Last Saturday" make it pretty clear the event discussed happened in the past. The verb "called" also makes the past tense clear because of the -ed ending. However, the verb "compliment" is present tense.

To make the sentence consistent, it needs to be all in past OR present tense. Sometimes, you have a choice which tense you want. However, in this example, the sentence needs to be written in past tense to make sense:

Last Saturday, I called up my cousin Keith and complimented him on his band's new CD.

Verb Tense Agreement Errors

Here is another example:

I was suppose to pick up my friend Jon at the airport, but if I forgot, he gets mad.

>>>This sentence has a mixture of past and present tense verbs which is quite confusing. The sentence needs to be rewritten either in all present tense or all past tense.

Present tense version:

I am supposed to pick up my friend Jon at the airport, but if I forget, he gets mad.

Past tense version:

I was supposed to pick up my friend Jon at the airport, but I forgot and he got mad.

>>>Note: Any verb that follows the word “to” is present tense: to pick, to run, to cook

I use to work at the grocery store, but I resigned three weeks ago.

>>>This sentence is clearly referring to a past-tense situation (resigned, three weeks ago). However, the sentence contains a present-tense verb (use). This sentence has to be written in past tense to make sense:

I used to work at the grocery store, but I resigned three weeks ago.

Verb Tense Agreement Errors

And finally, in honor of my father Tom Gulick, here is something he once uttered that confused us all. We were driving down the street, and Dad noticed one of his friends sitting in a parked car. Dad said the following:

“Norm’s front tire looks pretty low, and I’m gonna tell him that as I drove by.”

“I’m going” = I am going = future

“as I drove by” = past tense = ???

We still don’t know what he was talking about 😊

A Word about Irregular Verbs

And my word is...sighhhhhhhhhhhhhhh.

If only all verbs behaved the way we just saw – just add an –ed to the end of a verb to indicate past tense. Let's look at some verbs associated with gardening:

I plant > I planted, I water > I watered, I weed > I weeded, I hoe > I hoed, I dig > I digged.
digged???

Digged isn't a verb; dug is the past tense form of dig. In reality, English is filled with what are called irregular verbs, verbs that do not show past tense by adding an –ed suffix.

Rather, irregular verbs present different versions of the verb. Truthfully, irregular verbs aren't always easy to figure out, and they don't always make a whole lot of sense.

This is an example of a regular verb; this makes sense:

I shoveled too much snow yesterday. >> past tense verb indicated by the –ed suffix.

I shovel snow for the cardio benefits. >> present tense

I will shovel the snow tomorrow after work. >> future tense

A Word about Irregular Verbs

This makes no sense:

I was the best at coloring in my kindergarten class. >> past tense

I am the best at coloring in my kindergarten class. >> present tense

I will be the best at coloring in my kindergarten class. >> future tense

Was? Am? Will be?

Other than just memorizing irregular verbs or looking them up in a dictionary, there is no simple way to learn them. Further, there are hundreds of irregular verbs.
